

Wednesday -The Technical Museum

On Wednesday, the 26th of April we got up early to meet the group at 10 o'clock. Because of a Blackout a lot of the trains didn't come but we still managed to make it in time. In the museum we first got a tour around the bottom floor, where we could see technological achievements from the past as well as plans for the future to make our cities and society more sustainable. Afterwards we had a workshop on how to think more creative and how to use those creative ideas to improve our cities. When the workshop was done it was time to explore the museum! There were a lot of games and competitions, such as a rowing competition, a grip strength competition and a skiing simulator. The museum also had a large section where we could playfully learn about mining in the past and the present, which was both interesting and entertaining.

When we were done with the museum the Swedish teachers gave us a brief tour around Stockholm, talking about the history and future of the city and showing us the large park system that goes through the city. Afterwards we split into groups and then ate some at Espresso House, a large chain of coffee shops all around Sweden. We also got to see some parts of the old town and the royal castle. When we were done with that we ate dinner in the new Ikea, which was by far the cheapest meal we had all week. It still tasted amazing though.
