

On our first Day in Sweden, we spent the first half of the day travelling by train to Stockholm, which we also slept in. Upon arrival in Stockholm we took a metro to TEG, where we temporarily stored our luggage and met our hosts again. We met the headmaster and the CEO of TEG, who presented the solar panels on the roof to us, which apparently are able to cover a third of TEG energy outflow.

They gave us a tour of TEG and we got a taste of their fabulous school food. Then, two teachers of the climate club gave us a short briefing about how big of an impact they had on local politics and what changes they made. We had traditional fika, with regional ingredients to minimize the carbon dioxide footprint and ended the day with a short visit to the local mall.

A report by Tim Z. and Johannes H.